The Honorable Mel Watt, Director
Federal Housing Finance Agency

Timothy Mayopoulos, President & CEO
Fannie Mae

Donald H. Layton, CEO
Freddie Mac

Dear Director Watt, Mr. Mayopoulos, and Mr. Layton:

We are submitting this joint letter out of our concern that an important opportunity to help improve language access for people who are not fluent in English is being lost.

Not including language preference in the Uniform Residential Loan Application (URLA) would be a serious setback for mainstreaming language access and for helping consumers who are not fluent in English get correct and understandable information. During the predatory lending era and the foreclosure crisis, people who were not fluent in English misunderstood or were misled because the communications were not in a language they could understand.

Allowing mortgage applicants to choose in which language they are most comfortable in communicating addresses a major problem of lenders and servicers working with limited English proficiency (LEP) populations and collecting this information through the URLA is the most comprehensive way to do so, because every mortgage borrower fills one out.

Including language preference in the URLA redesign will also allow language preference to be a data field included in the Uniform Mortgage Data Program. This information will then be available to the lender and to mortgage servicers, regardless of how often the loan or servicing rights are sold.

Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, FHFA, and housing advocates have been engaged in a fruitful discussion on how best to address the language needs of LEP applicants. These groups are set to meet with the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to explore ground rules for how lenders and servicers can collect the language needs of applicants. It would be a terrible mistake to close the redesign of the mortgage application without taking action on this problem. The redesign of the mortgage application is a massive change for the industry. It has been two decades since the last major URLA changes and it will be a long time before this opportunity comes again.

The mortgage industry needs thoughtful leadership to aggressively address the language needs of their customers. Frankly the mortgage industry is out of step with the demographics and language needs of the current marketplace. We are eager to work with you and other stakeholders to develop best practices and ground rules for the best way to communicate with limited English proficiency populations. However, step one in that process is including language preference in the URLA, so that lenders and servicers can know in which language the borrower prefers to communicate.

We would greatly appreciate a meeting with you and your staff and representatives of the undersigned stakeholders. For follow-up, please feel free to contact Bruce Dorpalen of the National Housing Resource Center at (215) 765-0048 and bdorpalen@hsgcenter.org, or Rob
